

Bipartisan answers needed

I just read the Dec. 29 article “Bipartisan committee recommends Nebraska develop action plan on climate change” and am so impressed by the Nebraska Legislature for finding common ground on this very difficult political issue. State Sen. Ken Haar of Malcolm is right to wish that Congress would take a lesson from the example your Legislature is setting.

In fact, last year a bipartisan House caucus — the Climate Solutions Caucus — was established to study climate solutions. There are currently 20 members — 10 Republicans and 10 Democrats.

I hope Nebraskans encourage all three of their House representatives to join the caucus and work for bipartisan national climate policies that will benefit the country economically and environmentally.
