JOANN FITZPATRICK: Cost of inaction on climate change is too high

Thanks for JoAnn Fitzpatrick's op-ed on the high cost of not fighting climate change which focused on the costs of flooding from super storms and rising seas. Her next article could deal with the high cost to our tourism industry as ski areas lack snow, beach areas are devastated and wooded areas are affected by declining tree populations. Or her next article could cover the high cost climate change inaction will have on our fishing industries, maple syrup industry or other food industries.

Your readers should please contact the White House and ask President Obama to explain in a nationally televised talk what he plans to do about climate change in order to save our economy and to protect the planet for our children.
