

TOM EBLEN COLUMNS

Green resurrection

Tom Eblen's column describing the green recoveries of Greensburg and West Liberty following destructive tornados was inspiring.

Kudos to people who pick themselves up after disaster, and as they rebuild they make choices that are best for the planet, even if the choices cost them more at the outset. What wonderful examples of people who act, not out of bitterness, but out of loving kindness and loyalty to our Creator.

There may come a time that residents of these towns notice that their conservation efforts alone are not enough to slow climate change.

At that point, perhaps they will start demanding that their senators and representatives pass serious legislation to deal with climate change on a national level.

It would be sad if the whole country had to suffer destruction from tornados, heat waves, droughts, wildfires and rising sea levels before they would consider living in a greener fashion.

Rabbi Judy Weiss

Brookline, Mass.

Read more here: <http://www.kentucky.com/2012/09/02/2320354/letters-to-the-editor-sept-2.html#storylink=cpy>