No Time To Lose

J.J. Goldberg got it right in his February 8 column, "A Presidential Agenda With a Glaring Omission." Barack Obama's agenda seems to have room for everything except climate change.

Those of us who are nervous about it call the White House daily, asking that the president stop the Keystone XL pipeline, hold a summit on climate change solutions and speak out often on the issue.

Those of us who are already scared about the omission of climate change from the president's agenda have made plans to go to Washington for a march to let the president know he must take bold action with his executive powers because it is unlikely that Congress will pass serious legislation soon.

Since scientists have made it clear that we don't have time to waste anymore on politics as usual, people must take to the streets.
