

Your climate change editorial has the wrong conclusion. You say Congress has the responsibility “to craft policies at home and forge agreements abroad to limit the greenhouse gas emissions.” However, congressional climate change deniers have prevented the current Congress from acting responsibly, and they mock administration efforts, threatening to undo them.

Therefore, voters must take responsibility and remove from Congress all who won't take action against climate change, who threaten to undo emission standards, voted to prevent Environmental Protection Agency regulation of greenhouse gases, voted to continue oil and gas tax subsidies, plan to end wind tax credits, and the like.

Voters must remove these obstructionist deniers from office so conservatives, centrists and liberals can craft serious bipartisan federal legislation that will include all of the above plus a tax on fossil fuel extractors that will be rebated to American households to defray the costs of converting to a clean energy economy.

Judy Weiss, Brookline, Mass.

This letter was published in the Sept. 9 edition.

<http://blogs.denverpost.com/eletters/2012/09/08/paying-attention-climate-change-7-letters/19325/>