

Pruitt's hot air

Brookline, Mass.: Environmental Protection Agency
Administrator Scott Pruitt says stop worrying about global warming, it'll be good. Let's flowchart his arguments: He used to say (wrongly) we didn't cause warming with fossil fuel carbon emissions. He switched to arguing (unethically) that even if emissions cause warming, everybody is burning fossil fuels, so what we do won't matter. Now, he spins together wrong and unethical, saying we shouldn't stop because warming will be good. Warming wasn't good in 2017. Continued inaction means bad, worse, awful for future humans. Pruitt's spin is like an exquisitely executed triple axel. It sounds like my husband's funniest t-shirt: "I didn't do it. And besides, everybody else was doing it. And it shouldn't be forbidden anyway." Judy Weiss
