To the editor:

Thank you for Charlotte Kahn's fabulous climate change column. I appreciated learning about your municipality-owned electric department and the fine example set by Don Bowen and his business.

While you're doing fine work reducing local emissions and it's true that we must act locally, we must also think globally. Regarding climate change, thinking globally means demanding government policies that ensure national and global action to reduce emissions. The best policy to reduce both national and global emissions is a US carbon emissions fee which will also be applied to foreign imports thus encouraging worldwide carbon emissions reductions.

Readers should please ask Rep. Seth Moulton to speak about the need to cut emissions, the logic of a carbon emissions fee and the reasons to rebate the fee to the public. Please contact Citizen's Climate Lobby's North Shore chapter for more information.
